

6A Peony Wong

22nd Feb 2011

Recently, members of the “post-80s” generation believe that they are less happy and more anxious than those of the older generation. Some do accept such a conclusion and believe that the government needs to do something for them. Writing a letter to the editor of young post either strongly support or strongly disagree with his decision provide at least three reasons in supporting your opinion.

In 2010, the scene of hustle and bustle is found in Hong Kong at all times of the year. Every citizen plays a major part in maintaining the law and order, developing the public installation and the economy. The society with settled development depends on people from all walks of life. There are different responsibilities of different generations. For instance, “post-90s” generation is future’s master and need to pay more attention to academic result. The “post-80s” generation who are some adults between 20 and 30, their responsibility is to earn more money and boost the economy.

“Money is the roof of all evils”. Have you heard of this before? If we want to live in a spacious flat, eat some delicious food, dress up some gorgeous clothes, we need to earn money. Some of the “post-80s” had just come of age and they might not earn money easily. Most of the “post-80s” live in public housing estates because of insufficient money. This is my first reason of why I support the government to do something for the “post-80s” generation. In my opinion, the government can allocate allowance to them. Let’s move them away from the crowded and noisy places and help them raise the living standard.

Moreover, the “post-80s” generation has less work experiences that they cannot be promoted to a higher position. Compared with the experienced job seekers, those inexperienced “post-80s” will get the lower remuneration. So, I think they have difficulties in looking for a better job. Although those “post-80s” who have diplomas can find a job easily; for those without associate degrees or bachelor degrees, it is not easy for them to apply for a post because of their skills. In my opinion, the government should give them some kinds of assistance, for instance, project Yi Jin, youth pre-employment training. Also, the employment agency can give them some information of the career prospects and help them find eligible job positions.

As far as we know, most of the people before 20 years old enjoy having some recreation events, for example, yachting, canoeing, hiking, picnicking, travelling etc. after they graduated , they need to keep pace with the society that they would not have time to go outing with friends. They would be under tremendous pressure. The “post-80s” would have a big gap between teenagers and adults. So they are unhappy because of their new life. I think the government should make allowance for their new life and should give them more paid holidays to release their tension. Let them cope with their career history.

In summary, the “post-80s” are unhappy because they need to look for a job and they face a hustle and bustle in the society. I am saying that the government should let them release their tension.